A simple and reliable radioimmunoassay for steroids in plasma is described. The incubation mixture comprises a mixture of [125I]steroid-[14C]protein conjugate and plasma and is assayed for either [125I]steroid by scintillation counting or [14C]protein by counting radioactivity in thin layer chromatography. The radioimmunoassay procedure has been used to determine follicle-stimulating hormone, luteinizing hormone, progesterone and estradiol in plasma in reference to untreated controls in patients with hirsutism and in normal women. However, when the progesterone and the estradiol assays were performed, it was found that other parameters such as total protein or albumin were significantly influencing the results.Yes, her name is Crystal.She loves playing with toys and "arguing" with you.She has two litters at home and is going to be the oldest one to deliver at 12 weeks.Bred to 13s, primarily, and carries CH, CH Cream, CH Cream x CH Cream and CH cream x Merle B. Remember to watch for more. There's a good chance that she will have more litters when she goes to whelping. There's one in hot seat at the moment and I'm leaving it alone for now. I'll post her litters as they appear. Don't forget to check back for more members.What Will The White House Menu Do for Us
