This is the first time I've done rubber band impressions, so maybe I'm missing something simple.

I'm trying to make some little clothespins, and have put some oil on my hands before tying the rubber bands to my thumb. For some reason, the rubber bands don't stay completely flat when I make the impressions. I've tried different thicknesses and thicknesses of rubber bands, but I can't seem to get them to sit neatly on the surface. Any ideas? A: First, try two rubber bands, not one. The one rubber band will tend to stretch if it is very thin. You'll also want two hands, not one, to get a good grip. The way

I do it is to start with a double rubber band, stretch it, turn it over, then stretch it again, twisting it until I get it flat and long. Then I get another double rubber band and tie it off to the first double rubber band, and then the two together will be somewhat twisted. You'll have a band that is still flat, but twisted.

Then, I do exactly the same thing, and then the two together are more-or-less twisted. Now, make a loop in the middle and stretch it out. At this point, I pull my rubber bands so that each double rubber band is fully open and then stretching it out again. This twists the rubber band into a nice circle. Now take that center loop, and give the two rubber bands a nice twist, making a triangle. Then start the loop again, pulling on each side until it will not stretch. This twists
